Policing of the Hunting Act in North Wales examined in newly published review

January 12 saw the launch of an independent review into the policing of the Hunting Act in North Wales. The review was ordered in May 2022 by North Wales Police and Crime Commissioner Andy Dunbobbin and, while the text highlights that North Wales Police's actions are consistent with good practice, it also includes a set of recommendations for the Force on how it polices hunting across the region.

The report has been prepared by members of Cyfiawnder – the Social Inclusion Research Institute at Wrexham Glyndwr University, who sought the views of the pro-hunting and anti-hunting community, the police and others connected with the issue.

The review looked at enforcement challenges linked to Hunting Act 2004 for the police; what constitutes good practice in relation to policing the hunting ban; how well North Wales Police performs in relation to illegal fox hunting and incidents connected with hunting that are brought to their attention; and how well the Force complies with National Standards on recording, responding, investigating and prosecuting incidents connected to hunting. Read more here.

On Thursday 5 January Andy Dunbobbin met Councillor Gwennol Ellis, who represents Uwchaled Ward on Conwy County Borough Council, to discuss road safety issues in Glasfryn, Cerrigydrudion and the campaign by local residents to reduce the speed limit on the A5 through the village.

The PCC and Cllr Ellis walked the stretch of the road through the village from the Old Post Office Bus Stop to the former Ty'n y Felin School to understand the problems with speeding affecting residents.
